Take nine people off the street right now and ask them to tell you what art is but the kicker is whatever they say will now become the undisputed truth. That's what happened today.

A multibillion dollar luxury fashion house who says they "care" about art and artists but..

..feel they have the the right to choose what art IS and who IS an artist. Not because of what they create but because their CV doesn't scream artist with a pedigree from a world class art school. That's what happened today.

A broken justice system that doesn't allow an art..

..expert to speak on art but allows economists to speak on it. That's what happened today.

What happened today was wrong. What happened today will continue to happen if we don't continue to fight. This is far from over.

A huge set back to the entire space, but use this as fuel. Launch gasoline and become so damn good brands are begging to work with you. You only lose when you give up.

Whenever they need to justify ridiculous prices, art and value is in the eyes of the beholder. But they'll flip the script real quick on you when it doesn't fit their interest

Take 9 people off the street and ask them "who is Jean-Michel Basquiat"... 99% will have no clue.

The battle may be lost, the war is not over.

Mason, I closely followed the trial.

What remains unclear is the judge's choice to exclude Blake Gopnik.

His testimony may have changed the outcome.

What was the court's reasoning?

I've never heard a definition of art that includes "randomly generated jpeg copying a thing that exists in the world and using that thing's name."

You're mad cuz you can't profit from a name and design already trademarked by a major brand? You're mad you can't be a millionaire with bare minimum effort? Actually design something original, then go cry about your "art".
